CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Muslu's clinical work centers on child and adolescent health from the newborn period onward. In the first weeks of life, he provides newborn follow-up and treatment of neonatal jaundice. For infants, his areas of expertise include infant colic and lactose intolerance in infants, together with feeding and nutrition concerns that can arise in this age group.

He also sees children with acute and recurrent illnesses, including childhood infectious diseases, upper respiratory tract infections, and childhood rash illnesses. His practice further covers functional and elimination problems that are common in childhood, such as constipation and urinary incontinence in children.
