CLINICAL FOCUS

In pediatric rehabilitation, Aylin Kurt works with children whose movement, posture or daily function may benefit from a structured rehabilitation program. The starting point is an assessment of the child's current abilities and the goals that matter to the child and the family. A rehabilitation plan is then built around these functional goals and reviewed as the child progresses.

Her second area is spine health. Patients in this group are assessed for how their spine-related complaints affect movement, posture and everyday activity. The assessment looks at function, mobility and the patient's own goals, and the rehabilitation plan is set out accordingly.
