CLINICAL FOCUS

A central part of Dr. Hekmatjou's practice is trauma care. This involves the structured initial assessment of injured patients, stabilization of vital functions, and decisions about further diagnostic imaging or referral to surgical or other specialist teams. He also manages environmental emergencies, a broad group that includes insect stings and tick bites.

Dr. Hekmatjou has a further interest in drowning-related emergencies and the respiratory problems that can accompany them, including acute hypoxia, in which the body's tissues do not receive enough oxygen. Related to this is the management of airway obstruction, where rapid recognition and appropriate intervention are essential to restore and maintain breathing.
