CLINICAL FOCUS

A large part of Dr. Arslan's practice is preventive and developmental care. This includes newborn follow-up in the first weeks of life, well-child follow-up as children grow, childhood vaccinations, and childhood nutrition monitoring. In newborns and infants she assesses and manages conditions such as newborn jaundice and infant colic, and advises families on feeding and day-to-day care.

Dr. Arslan also diagnoses and treats pediatric infectious diseases, including upper respiratory tract infections in children, which are among the most frequent reasons for a pediatric visit. She sees children with PFAPA syndrome, a condition characterized by recurrent episodes of fever, and works with families to establish the diagnosis and plan management.
