CLINICAL FOCUS

A significant part of Dr. Seçim's work concerns the first weeks and months of life. She provides newborn follow-up, monitoring feeding, growth and development during routine visits, and she organizes newborn screening tests, which are used to identify certain conditions early so that they can be assessed and, where necessary, managed in good time.

Dr. Seçim diagnoses and treats pediatric infectious diseases, including upper respiratory tract infections in children and croup, a condition that typically causes a barking cough and noisy breathing in young children. Her assessment aims to distinguish self-limiting illnesses from those that require closer monitoring or specific treatment.
