CLINICAL FOCUS

A significant part of Dr. Aydemir's work concerns childhood growth disorders, where evaluation typically involves reviewing growth measurements over time alongside the child's general health and nutritional status. Related nutritional and metabolic concerns in his practice include rickets and iron deficiency and anemia in children;

In the youngest patients, Dr. Aydemir's areas of expertise include newborn jaundice and infant colic, both of which are assessed in the context of feeding, weight gain, and the infant's overall condition. He treats upper respiratory tract illnesses in children and croup, and he evaluates children with PFAPA syndrome, a condition characterized by recurring episodes of fever.
