CLINICAL FOCUS

The emergency service is usually the first point of contact for patients who arrive with a sudden illness, an injury or a worsening of an existing condition. The work of an Emergency Service physician in this setting generally involves an initial clinical assessment, the ordering and interpretation of first-line investigations where they are indicated, initial treatment and stabilization, and a decision on the next step,...

For international patients, the emergency service is most often relevant in two situations: when an acute problem arises while a patient is in Turkey, and when a patient who is already under treatment for another condition develops new symptoms that need to be assessed without delay.

INTERNATIONAL PATIENTS

Dr. Çelik speaks Turkish and English, and interpreters can be arranged for patients who speak other languages. The Acibadem international patient team coordinates the collection of prior medical reports and imaging, arranges appointments and organizes the hospital visit.
