CLINICAL FOCUS

Gizem Erbil's work centers on two areas of rehabilitation. The first is pediatric rehabilitation, which involves the assessment of children with movement, posture or functional difficulties and the planning of therapy programs adapted to the child's age, developmental stage and daily needs. Family involvement is generally part of this process, and treatment plans are reviewed over time as the child's abilities change.

The second area is spine health. In this field, a physiotherapist evaluates posture, mobility, muscle strength and movement patterns related to the neck and back, and works with the patient on an exercise-based program aimed at maintaining or improving function. The specific approach depends on the individual assessment and, where relevant, on the findings and recommendations of the referring physician.
