CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Güler's clinical work covers a range of acute presentations that require prompt assessment. In trauma, this includes the initial evaluation of injured patients, stabilization and the coordination of further diagnostic steps and treatment as needed. Airway obstruction and acute hypoxia are conditions in which securing breathing and oxygenation is the immediate priority, and Dr.

Environmental emergencies form another part of his practice. These include bee stings and tick bites, which can range from mild local reactions to more serious reactions that require urgent treatment. In each case, the aim is to recognize the severity of the condition early, to intervene appropriately and to decide whether the patient can be discharged, needs a period of observation or should be admitted for further care.
