CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Kurtulan's practice centers on occupational health, workplace health services and preventive health. Occupational medicine addresses the relationship between a person's work and their health, including the assessment of health in the context of workplace conditions and the provision of health services to working populations.

His experience in hospital management and health advisory roles, together with his academic positions, informs an approach that considers both the individual patient and the wider organizational and preventive context in which health concerns arise. Each consultation is guided by the patient's history and circumstances, and any recommendations are discussed with the patient on an individual basis.
