CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Şentürk's clinical interests center on the acute conditions seen in an emergency department. His areas of expertise include trauma and environmental emergencies, a group of conditions that arise from exposure to the outdoor or marine environment. Within this group he manages bee stings, tick bites, and drowning emergencies, which may require rapid assessment and stabilization.

He also focuses on acute hypoxia and airway obstruction, situations in which oxygen supply to the body is compromised and timely intervention is needed. In each case, the initial approach in the emergency setting involves assessing the patient's condition, securing vital functions, and determining whether further diagnostic evaluation or referral to another specialty is appropriate.
