CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Köse's practice is centered on pediatrics, covering the health of children from infancy through adolescence. His work in child health includes the assessment of children who present with symptoms or concerns raised by their families, the interpretation of existing reports and test results, and the planning of further evaluation or follow-up where this is indicated.

A further part of his practice is adolescent health. Adolescents may have health needs that differ from those of younger children, and Dr. Köse's subspecialty in Child and Adolescent Health reflects this range. His experience spans a university department, a Ministry of Health children's hospital and a private clinic, which has involved caring for children and adolescents in both hospital and outpatient settings.
