CLINICAL FOCUS

A significant part of Dr. Kara's work involves the care of newborns and young infants. This includes newborn follow-up visits, newborn screening tests and newborn jaundice treatment, together with guidance for families on common early concerns such as infant colic.

Beyond the newborn period, Dr. Kara's clinical interests include PFAPA syndrome, a recurrent fever condition of childhood, and Kawasaki disease, which requires careful clinical recognition and follow-up. He also evaluates hematuria in children, working through the possible causes of blood in the urine on the basis of the child's history, examination and laboratory results.
