CLINICAL FOCUS

A large part of emergency medicine involves patients who arrive with sudden injuries or with conditions that can change quickly. Dr. Döker has a particular interest in trauma, where the first priorities are a structured evaluation of the injured patient, identification of injuries that need immediate attention and coordination of further care with other departments when required. He also focuses on bee stings and tick bites.

His other main areas of interest are breathing-related emergencies. These include drowning emergencies, acute hypoxia (a sudden fall in the oxygen available to the body) and airway obstruction, in which the passage of air to the lungs is partly or completely blocked.
