CLINICAL FOCUS

A central part of Dr. Özarar's practice is the imaging of breast diseases. This includes mammography, an X-ray-based examination of the breast that is commonly used both in screening and in the assessment of specific findings, and ultrasonographic imaging, which uses sound waves rather than radiation and is often applied to characterize findings seen on mammography or felt on clinical examination.

Dr. Özarar also works with magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). In the context of breast disease, MRI may be considered when additional information is needed beyond mammography and ultrasound, for example in selected diagnostic situations or in the follow-up of previously identified findings.
