CLINICAL FOCUS

Hearing loss can take different forms and appear at any age, and its evaluation begins with accurate, well-documented testing. Melisa Yalçın performs audiometry, a hearing test that measures how a person responds to sounds of different pitches and volumes. The results help the treating ENT physicians understand the type and degree of hearing loss and inform the discussion of further steps.

A significant part of her clinical interest is pediatric hearing loss. Testing children calls for approaches adapted to age and cooperation, and objective methods such as BERA (ABR) testing play an important role in the assessment of infants and young children. Her assessments are performed within the ENT unit, where the findings are shared with the physicians responsible for diagnosis and treatment planning.
