CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Tufan's clinical work centers on the conditions that most often bring young children to a pediatrician. He diagnoses and treats childhood infectious diseases and upper respiratory tract illnesses in children, including croup. He also evaluates children with PFAPA syndrome, a condition characterized by recurring episodes of fever, and follows them over time.

In the newborn period, Dr. Tufan provides newborn follow-up and evaluates newborn jaundice, monitoring the infant's condition and advising parents on next steps. For older infants and children, he carries out healthy child follow-up, tracking growth and development at routine visits, and he evaluates developmental disorders in children when concerns are raised by parents or noted during examination.
