CLINICAL FOCUS

Özlem Balcı supports the assessment of hearing-related concerns in adults and children. A central part of her work is audiometry, the measurement of hearing thresholds and the way sound is perceived at different frequencies and volumes. These measurements help the ENT team understand the type and degree of a person's hearing difficulty and form part of the broader evaluation of hearing loss.

A further area of her work is pediatric hearing loss. Hearing assessment in children requires methods adapted to the child's age and ability to cooperate, and results are usually considered together with the family's observations and the findings of the ENT examination. Where a child or adult has a significant degree of hearing loss, the assessment may be one element of a wider evaluation carried out by the ENT team;
