CLINICAL FOCUS

Emergency medicine is concerned with the prompt evaluation and initial management of patients whose condition may be acute or rapidly changing. In this setting, Dr. Mert focuses on stabilization, diagnosis and appropriate emergency management.

A further part of his work involves environmental emergencies. These include drowning, where early evaluation of breathing and oxygenation is essential, as well as insect bites and stings. Bee stings can range from a local reaction to a more significant allergic response, and tick bites may need assessment of the bite site and consideration of possible complications.
