CLINICAL FOCUS

A significant part of Dr. Kara's practice concerns the newborn period. Newborn follow-up involves monitoring feeding, weight gain and general well-being during the first weeks of life. Newborn screening tests are used to identify certain conditions early, and newborn jaundice is assessed to decide whether observation or treatment is appropriate.

For older children, Dr. Kara addresses childhood constipation, iron deficiency and anemia and urinary incontinence in children. Assessment usually begins with the child's history, diet and growth pattern, followed by a clinical examination and, where indicated, laboratory tests.
