CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Tokgönül's practice brings together the aesthetic and reconstructive sides of plastic surgery. In aesthetic surgery, the purpose of an operation is to change the shape or appearance of a feature at the patient's own request. Whether surgery is appropriate, which technique is considered and what the recovery is likely to involve are matters that are assessed individually, and not every request is suitable for an operation.

Because each of these fields can involve a range of different procedures, the option that is appropriate for a particular patient is determined only after a clinical examination and a review of the relevant history. Where existing photographs, reports or imaging are available, they form part of that assessment.
