CLINICAL FOCUS

A central part of Dr. Koska's work is the imaging of breast diseases. This includes mammography and ultrasonographic imaging of the breast, which are used to examine breast tissue, characterize findings and help guide further clinical decisions. Where appropriate, breast MRI may also form part of the assessment.

Beyond breast imaging, Dr. Koska works with cross-sectional imaging techniques, including magnetic resonance imaging and computed tomography, as well as ultrasonographic imaging of other regions of the body. These methods are used to visualize organs and soft tissues in detail and to support the diagnostic process across a range of clinical questions.
