CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Tak's areas of focus include trauma-related presentations and emergencies that affect breathing and oxygenation. Trauma care in the emergency setting involves the initial assessment and stabilization of patients with injuries, with attention to the airway, breathing, and circulation, and coordination with other specialties where further treatment is needed.

Environmental emergencies form a second area of interest. These include drowning and other conditions related to exposure to the surrounding environment. Drowning may lead to acute hypoxia, a reduced supply of oxygen to the body's tissues, which requires prompt recognition and management. Airway obstruction, whether caused by a foreign body, swelling, or injury, is another time-critical condition that Dr.
