CLINICAL FOCUS

Dr. Elri's clinical interests lie in the main imaging methods of nuclear medicine. Positron emission tomography (PET) is an imaging examination that uses a small amount of a radioactive tracer to show how tissues and organs are functioning, and it is commonly used alongside other imaging to help characterize findings and guide further evaluation.

In practice, Dr. Elri's role includes assessing whether a nuclear medicine examination is appropriate for a given clinical question, planning and supervising the examination, and interpreting the resulting images in the context of the patient's history and existing imaging.
