CLINICAL FOCUS

Her clinical work is centered on physical medicine and rehabilitation. Within this field, lymphedema treatment is her listed subspecialty. Lymphedema is a condition in which fluid accumulates in the tissues, most commonly in an arm or leg, and its management is usually planned in a stepwise way that takes into account the affected limb, the stage of the swelling and the patient's general condition.

Her broader area of expertise is rehabilitation care. Rehabilitation programs are typically individualized: they begin with an assessment of the patient's functional status and symptoms, and the program is then adjusted over time according to the patient's progress and tolerance.
